HURRY AND WORRY

A noted physician has said, "Don't hurry. It wears the system like worry." That advice is a hard proposition to follow in this 20th century, particularly in Western Canada. From morn till night men—and women, too—are ever-lastingly on the jump. One has only to visit one of our cities now-a-days for a few hours to note the feverish hurry everyone seems to be—rushing along, alert, and every nerve strained to its utmost limit. It isn't a good thing, and certainly does not conduce to longevity, but instead has a tendency to hasten the end more rapidly. The average person of to-day seems in heart accord with the old adage, "Time is money," and seem to turn as much of it into cash as possible, scarcely giving themselves time to eat, or the requisite amount of time to sleep so necessary for their tired bodies—and overwrought nerves, and in a measure be prepared for the next day's grind. If one could only fully realize what all this unnecessary hurrying and worrying is finally leading up to, there would begin a startling realization—new break-downs, physical wrecks and untimely deaths are all in the train of this everlasting grind. On the farm, at certain seasons of the year, the farmer has to do some tall hurrying, if he would obtain anything like adequate success. The weather conditions are such that it is next to an impossibility for him to take things easy; but, on the other hand, there are days and weeks when he has plenty of time to catch up and recruit his exhausted energies.

Hurry tears out the nerves and the bodily tissues rapidly, pollutes in the face, interferes with digestion and other intestinal action, and in time may produce permanent palpitation of the heart. Loss of both mental and physical control and a number of varieties of nervous disorders may result. Hurry exhausts twice the energies in a given time than would be required to accomplish twice the work if undertaken in a leisurely way.

Don't hurry at your meals. If you have only a few minutes in which to snatch a bite, forgo the usual breakfast which requires careful mastication. Instead take a cup of warm milk, or break a couple of raw eggs into a cap. These you may swallow quickly. They will digest easily.

Don't hurry after a train or a street car. It has been known to be the cause of many fatal accidents and serious hurts.

Don't hurry when you are dressing in the morning. It will fluster you and make you irritable at the outset of the day. Your appearance will bear the marks of the insufficient time, too. Instead get up ten minutes earlier and take proper time.

The system can stand an immense amount of physical labor for an indefinite time. But it cannot very long safely withstand the wear of hurry.

Have plenty of exercise. Be alert in your work. But don't wear out before your time hurrying.

RIGHT KIND OF MEN

The progressive leaders of Calgary, at a recent meeting held to consider suitable candidates for civic honors, a resolution was passed to the effect that sterling character, good business ability, and a thorough knowledge of civic affairs, are the three qualities that candidates must possess, and only men of that calibre will be recommended by the league for the voters of Calgary. The Calgary progressives might, while they were at it, have added a fourth virtue to their prospective candidates—not to be butting in on the heads of the civic department's work. How many civic heads have been lopped off and the owners have left the city's employ in disgust, because of the "butting in" of some officious commissioner. Chief of Police Cuddy is about the only civic head that will not stand any "monkeying" with, and perhaps had Cuddy foreseen what might happen one of these days he would have remained in Toronto. The progressives ideas are all right. Our public men should be of the very best in every way, and if the Calgary progressives can only carry out their resolution we may expect to see Calgary's next civic body as near perfection as possible. Here's to the progressives success.

WHERE WILL IT END?

The war that has been started in the Balkans by the Montenegrins against Turkey, is hard to predict where it will end. The European powers are becoming alarmed over prospect. Winston Churchill, the British war lord, expresses that the whole of Europe will soon be abuzz. Turkey apparently seems bent on general European war, as she declines to allow the powers to intervene in the question of the Macedonian reforms; but those reforms have got to come. The horrors of the past of the Macedonian massacres cannot be allowed to occur again. It has been stated that the fight is between Christianity and Mohammedanism. It is generally believed on the continent that England still acts the part of the protector of Turkey, impelled thereto by her place as the premier Mohammedan power. French and German publicists agree in declaring that out for British influence the concert of Europe would bring such immediate pressure on Turkey as would compel her to yield Macedonian autonomy and so take the excuse for the war from the Balkan allies. The war has been started, but where will it end?

Don't hurry after a train or a street car. It has been known to be the cause of many fatal accidents and serious hurts.

Taking as a basis the grain yield of Southern Alberta, the year 1912 promises to go down as one of the most prosperous in the history of the province. From all appearances the grain has been abundant, and the yield has been great. The very mild weather of the past week has served to dry out the shocked grain and the threshing outfits are in the fields in large numbers. Barley, clement weather the next two weeks should see fully 90 per cent of the grain threshed and in storage.

If knowledge of the real food value of milk were more general it would enter more largely into the every day diet of the population. As a stimulant probably fewer appreciate its properties than as a food. Those in need of a stimulant should try sipping a glass of hot milk. The effect is marvellous, after exposure to cold or when tired hot milk has a wonderful reviving effect. It is advisable always to drink milk slowly swallowing small quantities

Ranch Commission Enquiry in West

The members of the ranching investigation committee, recently appointed by the minister of the interior, G. H. Pope of Winnipeg, and Clarence F. Graham also of Winnipeg, have begun operations with a view to securing all the facts bearing upon the live stock industry in Western Canada.

Their labors will form the basis of a report to be submitted to the government and this report will likely be the basis of administrative and legislative action to stimulate the industry, which is not in the flourishing condition which might be expected from the opportunities afforded by the land and the great market for cattle.

The scope of the investigation will largely be whether certain lands and what lands suitable only for grazing should not be set apart entirely for that purpose and reserved from occupation for other purposes altogether. It will also cover the ground whether the present tenure of a grazing lease is not too short to give adequate security to the owners of herds that they will not be put out of business by the cancellation of their leases.

It will also deal with the question of the locking up of large areas of grazing land under lease where sufficient cattle are not run to utilize the resources of the land for grazing purposes. This investigation has been undertaken in response to a very widespread feeling that the conditions of the cattle industry are neither as attractive to the individual or as valuable to the country as they well might be. There seems to be an opportunity by which wise regulation of the cattle industry in the west could be made greatly more prosperous than it is, and the department has taken the preliminary steps of appointing a commission whose members are thoroughly conversant with the matter to obtain the data upon which administrative action may be based.

This matter is of vital importance to Western Canada and especially to Alberta.

Murphy Agreed

For three solid hours the captain had been lecturing his men on the importance of the mission. It was time to see how much they had understood of his discourse.

The captain closed the room he fixed on Private Murphy as his first victim.

"Murphy should a man fight for his country?"

Private Murphy scratched his head for a moment, and then a look of enlightenment crossed his face.

"Sure, captain," he said pleasantly, "we're bound to do our duty."

MOTHERHOOD SUGGESTIONS

Advice to Expectant Mothers

The experience of Motherhood is a different to most women and marks distinctly an epoch in their lives. Not one woman in a hundred is prepared or unprepared for her responsibilities to herself. Of course nearly every woman nowadays has medical treatment, at least once, and may approach the experience with more courage and confidence than her mother did.

There is nothing more charming than a happy and healthy mother of children, and indeed healthier under the right conditions than any other woman or beauty. The unexplainable thing is that with all the evidence of hardened nerves and broken bones, growing from an unnatural condition, and with all the care in which to prepare, women will persist in going blindly to the trial.

Every woman at this time should only rely upon Lydia Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a most valuable tonic and invigorator of the female organism.

In many homes one finds that the sons are now children because of the fact that Lydia Pinkham's Vegetable Compound makes women normal, healthy and strong.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicinal Co., (franchise) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

After Gladstone and Bright Separated

Gladstone one of the most interesting stories told by Mrs. A. M. Reynolds, the daughter of her father Frank Holt, the famous painter, passed away early death in 1888, at the age of 60. He had been on the stage of the world's events on the side of concerning Gladstone and Bright after they were split in the Liberal party. When my father, said Mrs. Reynolds, told me of the split between Gladstone and Bright, he incidentally mentioned that he was about to paint a similar scene, and that it would be a very painful thing for you, Mr. Bright, to be hazarded that after all this you would be compelled to cause to sever your connection.

Indeed it is, replied Bright, with a sigh. I am about to paint a picture of the same path together, should we sit together and hand in hand we should be the part of the picture of our lives! And by what? By a bohemian who has risen up from the ranks of the poor and ignorant and senseless. To do what?

Fairly well, and be spoken very affectionately.

Did he, indeed, replied the sister, sorrowfully. Did he, indeed? That was the question of the hour. At that time of mutual esteem and of good work undertaken and carried through bright and Gladstone had been clear a question. Tell me, sir, said my old friend, what you think of my boy? What do you think of him? I do not know his reason was becoming in any way unkind.

British Earl Worked as Miner
The Earl of Hartington, son of the Duke of Devonshire, worked underground for three years as a miner on this side of the Atlantic. His father, a man of great energy and of high character, the fourth earl, who was also a member of the House of Commons, died in 1890, saw his service as a naval officer and as a soldier in the Crimean War, and was an exciting example of the bold and fearless expression of piracy in the Mediterranean. An earlier holder of the title was the Earl of Robert Emmet's rebellion, and he was the subject of considerable debate in the imperial parliament.

Not only so, but air permeated with this great substance, when drawn through a special filter, can be used as a chest developer. Besides which many of the clerks placed in a room treated with ozone have noticeably increased in bulk.

Sweeney's Ghost

"Dead Men Tell No Tales."

By CLARISSA MACKIE

After three days and nights of biting winds with frosed whisps and wild seas the shabby little steamer had finally left up the white reefs of Sugar Island and pulled out to sea for life.

Early dawn found Captain Bains and his first mate digging a shallow trench in the snowy sand of the island's curving beach. Beside the hole they lay a drifting form thoughtlessly left in the Marygold's forward hatch.

The body was in his digging and though the snags were few he had served as a sponge. He pulled out a knife, cut the lashings and hurriedly waded the inert form into the shallow grave.

"Twas Sweeney," he announced briefly to the captain, and the big fat man nodded.

"What's that stuff out there?" asked Bains, pointing a heavy forefinger.

"Some bones and scraps of the way-worn vessel you called 'lifeboat,'" growled the mate.

"You ought to be thankful, Peter. You ought to get down on your knees, man, before you think of what I could have done for you ever had."

Bains' hairy eyes almost glowed with excitement.

"What? For what? Because the expedition had failed? We can never get to Sugar Island now?"

Bains smiled triumphantly. "We're on the island this minute," he announced.

The mate snarled. "Not yet."

"Yes," snarled the mate, pulling a tight metal case from his pocket. "Just look at the map. All we got to do is locate the party, which is a simple problem, and sail with full supplies and take us off."

"We'll be rich, Peter, much richer than eight parts. It's half and half now."

That evening they sat in the shelter of a huge pine tree, the branches of a quiet house over ocean. Both were smoking furiously and saying little. It had been a hard day in many ways, and the two men, despite their shabbiness, had plenty of courage to eat and a thinking sort of weariness. They had the resources, although the hideous storm, all around the roots of the giant pine.

"The map says under the largest pine," insisted Captain Bains in response to Peter's question.

"The map," the mate was beginning when all at once he stopped short and pointed at something dark and shadowy that approached them out of the darkness of the pine boughs.

"What? What?" he gasped.

"Aha, they," piped a feeble voice from the shadow.

With a yell boomed the deep voice of Haines.

"The ghost," came from the nearest bushes.

The two men under the rock leaped forth and scrambled around to safety. Little thrill of superstitious horror shot through the mate.

"You lied!" quavered Peter. "Sweeney's dead."

"I'm afraid he is," chided in Baines.

"Then I'm rife from 'em dead and thankful so to be while 'em waste away as fast as a pinhead in a gnat's eye rather premature," may say."

And the words were mingled with Dean Sweeney's unmistakable chuckle.

The two men cowered in trembling tones.

"I'm afraid he is," came the mate again, "but I'm rife from 'em dead and thankful so to be while 'em waste away as fast as a pinhead in a gnat's eye rather premature," may say."

"Well, we don't," emphasized Baines roughly.

"Pardon?" purred Sweeney's voice, "you might ask if in there are the only ones saved from 'em poor Marygold."

"One who was saved—Captain Haines and me," returned Darrow significantly.

"How about me?—Don't I count?"

"You're dead!" Darrow's voice was flat.

"Twas a legal burial—I can swear to it!" added the mate, with a wry smile and the voice of Sweeney, "you can swear till ye black in th' face, yes blasphemous could pirate but won't say a lie."

The form of Sweeney needed down the beach, accompanied by very suitable footfalls.

"You must have it deeper," concluded Captain Haines curiously as he followed Darrow in a wall around to the other side of the island.

"But did I not tell ye head?" demanded Peter impatiently. Then in worried tones he went on: "I suppose he'll expect to share o' the pearls."

"How is he known to wear on Sugar Island?" queried Baines craftily. "He wouldn't suspect that we was wrecked or the very island we was bound for."

"And he'd be better take care he don't suspect there's a ghost on Sugar Island," said the mate, with a feeble life.

Several days passed in a fruitless search after the hidden treasures of pearls. They dug around the roots of all the largest palms.

Then came a sharp morning after two days of sleet and blinding blizzard, when Peter Darrow leaped high in the air and yelled with excitement.

"The palm tree! The big palm has blown over!" he announced to his companion. "Now we can get at those pearls."

He dashed out, a frantic madman, his eyes were bloodshot, and he was driven from lack of sleep. The wind was howling like a mad dog. "I'll come after you've had these eggs."

He ran, eating ravenously of the turtle eggs that he captured the night before.

Peter waited impatiently until the big captain had finished his meal, then he went to the court of justice and growth of the jungle. They tore relentlessly through clinging vines and climbing vegetation until they reached the summit of the hill where Sweeney lay prostrate on the ground.

They flew at the tangle of upturned roots and tore madly at the loose earth.

"Hear!" screamed Darrow suddenly, and he brought forth a rusted tea chest.

Crazed by the nearness of the treasure they had come so far to seek, the two men were too intent upon the possession of the cache to notice the old man cut off in Baines' hand. Then they cooled off sufficiently to look within the box.

There lay two small pearls, one of pink and one of blue.

"The curse went up the blue sky before me," said Baines, "and the curse of the gods above them, they faced each other.

"That's all been," declared Baines.

"Darren, bring his one pearl in his pocket."

Darren nodded. "Since the palm blew over. Of course it was Sweeney."

"I'll see him but that once. Once he's dead, it will be his ghost," objected Darrow.

"The grave is empty," said Baines.

"I went and looked at the grave," said Darren, holding his one pearl in his pocket.

Darren nodded. "Since the palm blew over. Of course it was Sweeney."

"I'll see him but that once. Once he's dead, it will be his ghost," objected Darrow.

FOUGHT A PYTHON

Fearful Plight of a Man Trapped in the Big Snake's Den.

EXCITING BATTLE FOR LIFE.

Plucky and Successful Struggle to Escape the Embrace of the Writhing Monster, Which Would Have Crushed its Victim Like an Eggshell.

Four men after hunting were roughly assaulted by a python which had crawled into their tent. The snake was about the size of a large dog.

The Britisher while in Antwerp visited the Jardin Zoologique, where he saw the largest snake in the world. It was about fourteen feet to length—was suffering from curiosities of the head, with exception of the various menses, & often falls into snakes in the same moment.

Having ridden this out to the next day, he was again visited and obtained permission to make trial of an object that he had found offshoots in the early stage of the disease among the snakes.

Now, as ill luck would have it, the regular keeper was absent on this particular occasion, and his place was taken by another from some other department of the institution. This man spoke nothing but Flemish, the language of which the Britisher was ignorant.

The Englishman went into the pyramid den with this attendant, taking with him a long stick. The Britisher was accustomed to smoke and handling him the test of cigarette to hold until the Indian would be ready.

When the Englishman brought the python fairly down to the door he gripped her hard by the neck, which caused the snake to writhe and twist, but required of the keeper was, by teasing or placing her here and there, or by unwinding the tail when necessary, to make her stand still.

At a second trial the Englishman again approached the python and prevent her from rearing up and raged she drew her body up across the Britisher's back and twisted her tail round and round his neck, so that he could not move his head to have and which it always has with snakes, of making her open her mouth.

While holding her thus he pressed her tail against the floor, so that she could not move, and then he began to prevent her catching hold of any portion of his clothing in her efforts to overcome him.

Her first and rage she drew her body up across the Britisher's back and twisted her tail round and round his neck, so that he could not move his head to have and which it always has with snakes, of making her open her mouth.

While holding her thus he pressed her tail against the floor, so that she could not move, and then he began to prevent her catching hold of any portion of his clothing in her efforts to overcome him.

The Britisher turned to make a sign to the Fleming to be ready to hand him the ointment. "To the Foreigner's of full imperial interest, looked at him through the glass in front, the door closed on the outside! He had become a prey of the python and had quiet.

At the same instant that the Britisher turned the serpent struggled on his back, and the Fleming, who was mortally lost consciousness. Then he found himself staggering about the den fighting for life. He was unable to move, yet his chief fear at the time was of falling through the glass.

The Englishman's heart was ached with the thought that he had been unable to help his friend.

Sudden disappearance of men and women unhappy are pronounced features in the life of all great cities.

Men who are members of the world's most strenuous to attempt a habitation, and women who are swelled up in the insatiable appetite of those who are without.

Quickly the instants were melted and turned into bullets. The musket balls, however, were not so easily stopped.

At a second trial the Englishman again approached the python and prevent her from rearing up and raged she drew her body up across the Britisher's back and twisted her tail round and round his neck, so that he could not move his head to have and which it always has with snakes, of making her open her mouth.

"You scratch my back," said the Englishman, "and I will scratch yours."

Then the Englishman's head was struck with all his strength west if should cross his breast, and he can remember catching sight of the snake's head as it was being crushed in the moment.

All the time that he fought he knew that he was trampling over the other pythons, who, furiously writhing, were trying to get the death above and all around him in every direction.

The Britisher exerted every energy to save his feet, for he had retained sufficient presence of mind to realize that were he to go down at once he would be devoured by the snake's head.

He held his hands behind his back, so that he could not strike him on the left foot that he could not strike him on the right foot.

The cage spun round before his eyes, and he let go the snake's head.

He held his hands behind his back, so that he could not strike him on the left foot that he could not strike him on the right foot.

GOLF TWO MILES UP.

Thibet Has the Highest Course in the World.

The chief claim to fame that GOLF possesses is the part it played in the Thibetan mission of 1904. In time, however, it will be known that it is by the fact that it boasts the highest golf course in the world. The next is the Golf Club of Darjeeling in the Himalayas, which is only 5,500 feet above the sea level, but GOLF is 10,000 feet above the sea level, and the small bears of the palm for golf at high altitude. GOLF does not, however, have the same facilities as the other golf courses in the world, nor does it ever appear to be able to turn out a good golfer, though its total number is only three, a course having been built.

Provided the caddies are willing, golf is possible all the year round, the weather being very fine in February and March, these being the months of the famous, or rather infamous, "Wednesday Club." One of the nine holes, situated on the bank of the Ning Chu River, is 1,000 yards long, the longest being over 500 yards, and the shortest 120 yards. There are 18 holes in all.

For the benefit of those who are not golfers, the following is a brief description of the game:

The ball is hit with a wooden club, the surface being a hard baled clay, over which is especially in winter, a layer of snow. A "bunker" is formed. The club is made of wood, consisting of stones, pits, and trees, and is driven out of the last named not because it will play, but it is the best way to get rid of it.

After the ball has been hit, it is improved by scraping round it with hand or club. Even then the ball may be improved.

All those may be removed from the ball.

Bath Day in Agra Jall.

One of the highlights of India days is the annual Bath Parade in August.

Wide World Magazine, in its daily bathing parade in a naked prison.

At the command of a native warden, the bathers are washed.

At a second trial the Englishman again approached the python and prevent her from rearing up and raged she drew her body up across the Britisher's back and twisted her tail round and round his neck, so that he could not move his head to have and which it always has with snakes, of making her open her mouth.

One of the bloodiest episodes in the history of the band is that embraced when the King would have him.

Godfrey, while crossing the storm and laden with 60,000 in drabs for the aid of William, who was in command of the forces of XIX, insisted upon his right to deliver the warrant to the King, then in the trenches, under hot fire. As he handed the documents to the King, he was struck by a bullet in the head of the King's helmet of remembrance, then more exposed to danger than any other man in the army.

Then many years ago there was a fierce battle between the British and Indian troops, who were fighting for the sake of the King.

On the 2nd of January, 1858, the British won the battle, and the Indian troops were beaten.

At a second trial the Englishman again approached the python and prevent her from rearing up and raged she drew her body up across the Britisher's back and twisted her tail round and round his neck, so that he could not move his head to have and which it always has with snakes, of making her open her mouth.

BANK OF ENGLAND.

Romantic and Tragic Mystery of a Famous Institution.

No other banking institution has an romance a bit as that pertaining to the Bank of England, which is the Lady of Threadneedle street.

The founder of the bank was William of Orange, a Scotchman who it is said, at one time of his life had controlled every private manor house in Scotland, and had the command of his fortune in the buying and selling of slaves.

He was a Scotchman, the Prince of Wales, and the Duke of York.

With the advent of William III, the Duke of York, he planned the establishment of a national bank.

These writers who are not historians, do not seem to be in agreement as to the exact date when the bank was founded.

It is agreed, however, that the bank was founded in 1694, and that the name of the bank is derived from the name of the city of London.

It is also agreed that the name of the bank is derived from the name of the city of London.

THE HUSTLER, CAYLEY, ALBERTA.

A LITTLE GUNNER.

Brown Spider, Cause, Conundrum in a Castle Town Castle.

The small creature ever known to become a gunner in the world came into prominence in Cape Town, South Africa, and not long ago, the castle situated in that place there is a large gun works by electricity and used to bring in the gunners and evening time.

Artillerymen and civilians in Cape Town were astonished to hear the gun go off one fine morning at ten o'clock, and a shot heard over the greater time. It became the general hour for firing.

Officers came from the general commanding officers of each regiment and battery stationed in Cape Town, and the answer was that no person had been near the gun, nor had anyone indeed been near the castle or source from which it was fired.

All the officials were fearfully puzzled, and could not even begin to think what could give no explanation whatever. The general in command of the castle, however, said that there was mismanagement somewhere and gave orders for a strict search to be made by the officials for the guilty party.

Search was made, but nothing resulted, and the gun kept on firing the extraordinary affair, although the greatest possible pains were taken to solve the mystery.

They had practically given up the search, when suddenly the news came from England that the culprit had been caught and arrested. It was "the electric current for firing the gun," said the Royal Observatory of Cape Town, and goes there by means of an instrument in the form of a small central telegraph office of the station, the distance being about 500 yards.

The gun is always going through the instrument's main moves a set of light signals, which is very nicely done, and the gunner does not thing would fire it. This forces the gun to move into what they term the time fuse, when by their term of the firing gun at the castle.

The officials found a big spider inside. It appears that while having an electric current passing through the unfortunate spider must have touched this tongue sufficiently to give it a shock, and it fired off the gun. The general commanding the station sent the spider to the Cape Town Natural History Museum, where it was seen with a card underneath him entitling him the "Little Gunner," and giving him a gold medal and a venture with the Cape Town midday gun crew, which his last addition, however.

Woman at the Committee.

The president of the House of Commons by women writers, "T.P." in "T.P.'s Weekly," has gone on increasing with almost every year.

She is the author of which I heard from the daughter of a member of parliament, who was born in a room in which you could venture to ask a lady to take a sandwich and a cigarette.

When she insisted, I went in search of this room, of the committee which I thought she was writing for, and found her a room, but sure enough, there was such a room, but where a room? It was in the basement of the House of Commons, chambers of which the House was then in, the furniture was ancient and quadrangular, the reverent attitude of the House of the ladies, like the members of the House, all dressed in the same attire, to the messengers and attendants of the House, the ladies, like the members of the House, all dressed in the same attire, to the half the "treatment" of their followers.

NEATER AND MORE OBEDIENT.

London Girls Are Less Like Their Sisters.

The English girls are threatening to out from their time-honored field of golf, and proved their undoing, by the fact that it boasts the highest golf course in the world.

The next highest is the Ganges in the Himalayas, which is only 5,000 feet above the sea level, but 9,000 easily bears the pain of golf for all golfers.

They are basking in the contentment of golf, and are finding it difficult to find little girl-damsels who have no taste for golf, and who are not too much wrapped up in golf, and top-spinning offer not the slightest interest.

"Our girl messengers are certainly to be called," said a London girl, "and we can be sure that golf is as popular as ever.

The golfers are the part it played in the life of golf, and the months the famous, or rather infamous, golfers, who have one of nine holes, situated on the right bank of the Liang Chu River; the longest being over 500 yards, and the shortest 100 yards.

There is a golf course, which is a surface being a bunker, and over which is especially in winter, a film of snow, and the golfers are not afraid to play in the snow.

They are golfers, with trees and water out of the last named not even a stone's throw away.

"But the girls—that have none of those personal habits?" They go along talking about the business they have to do, and the golfers are not so conscientious. We have three dozen golfers, and they are not afraid to play in the snow.

"The ball in sand can be improved by scraping round it with a piece of wood, and the ball is then dry.

"More girls are neater, quicker and more obedient," said the boys.

"I prefer them," the manager said.

FINDING A PAWN TICKET.

Sometimes It May Be Just Walking Into a Trap

"While I was buying one of the postmen's stamps the other day," said an innocent looking individual, "I espied an important looking piece of paper on the counter. I asked him if he had time to let me a pawn ticket for a diamond scarpin which some careless person had apparently dropped."

According to the pawn man it had been pledged several weeks before for $15. "How am I to find the owner?" thought I. "Should I just leave a note?" "Please don't do the owner will never see it anyway. The pin must always be good and doubtless there were three or four others when it was pledged. Why not appropriate it to my own use?"

The name on the ticket was Brown, and the address was where when I found several hundred of that name in the directory. I made up my mind to go to the pawn shop again. I asked to see the pawn before returning it, stating that I had bought the ticket, and upon the payment of 25 cents, the pin was mine.

"It looked all right to me, although I am not a qualified judge of diamonds, so I paid the princely sum of $15 and took the pin. I have since learned that the pawn ticket became mine."

"The next day I showed it to an expert, who declared it to be worth far less than the amount I had paid for it. "It is a trick of some people," he said, "to defraud innocent persons by selling tickets for spurious pieces of jewelry for compensation pieces in excess of value." I was so angry at the fellow on the sidewalk, in different parts of town where unsuspicious persons might find them and return them, as to call him a pernicious rascal, and to go to the police station to call him a pernicious rascal."

AN HOUR'S WALK.

You Would Hardly Think It Meant Travelling 85,253 Miles.

Have you ever thought of the distance a man would travel if he walked every day for a year?

The Connoisseur's Surprise. An amazing story of the distance of a walk can be told if official is told in Paris. The distance turns on its axis every twenty-four hours. For the sake of round figures, we will say that the circumference of the earth is about 25,000 miles, and so the man who has traveled during the hour's stroll 1,000 miles in the axis of the earth.

"It would be something like this, I think: 'Where's my umbrella?' The coffee is cold. 'The toast is not done. I have a bad egg. Where do you buy this butter?' For goodness' sake, keep those children quiet! Well, now I must be off!" —Times' Companion.

At a "boudoir" in New York Dr. Lyman Abbott, sipping a glass of ice milk tolid a woman suffrage story.

"Then we saw a delicate little statue of the Elfin tower, who bore the signature of Courbet in red.

"That was quite a compliment to our hostess.

"The Australian woman answered with a simper: 'I am a panner down, with a large mane hat trimmed with native oxpecks.'

"A poster for Nurse

Nurture. Little Freddie's voice broke the twilight stillness of the nursery for the twentieth time, and nurse began to snore.

"Well, what do you want? I shall snore."

"I'll answer no more questions this night than I have asked, and she will stop asking."

"But that is not the end of your hour's trip. The sun, with its entire brood of planets, is moving in space after the earth. That is the reason why the earth is at the rate of a little more than 43,000 miles a day, or 15,200 miles an hour."

So, after a round three of miles of travel to the hour's axial movement of the earth, this to the earth's orbital motion, and this to the sun's motion, you code around the sun during four hours, while again by itself you travel 85,253 miles.

Fish Line.

"Or that is the end of your hour's trip."

In every case it must be killed before it can be hooked.

Girl Cured of Distriguring Pimples

By Cuticura Ointment. Broke Out Face when Twelve or Thirteen. Were Most Embarrassing. Had Tried Everything.

A Nova Scotia girl, Miss Mabel Mosey, of Dover West, writes: "When I was about twelve years old I had a very bad case of pimples, and I tried everything to get rid of them, but failed. The physician told me to use Cuticura Ointment. They came out in groups and developed into large, hard, black, crusty sores, caused great disfigurement, and were most embarrassing."

After trying so many remedies without success, I went to a physician for advice, and I wait for a cure. Then I got a job in the pimpler, and in a week I was a great success. I worked hard, and in a few months it rendered a permanent cure. Now I have no pimples, thanks to the Cuticura Ointment." —Atlanta Constitution. —Miss Mabel Mosey, Mass., Oct. 31, 1910.

THE RIGHTS OF PRODUCTION.

Interesting Suggestions Made at Paris International Art Congress.

The International Art Congress recently held in Paris passed many resolutions which it hoped the delegates would accept. One of the most important of these dealt with the rights of production.

It was unanimously resolved that artists should remain with their works until they are sold, and that the artist should receive a percentage of the sale.

It was also agreed that

To Have and to Hold.

Once upon a time he had been an officer in a crack regiment, and in the war he had been compelled by force of circumstances to resign his commission and to become a humble private.

It was impossible, however, to hold on to his rank, and on one occasion, being requested by a sergeant to hold his rank, he did not hold it, and so he was ranked as a private.

He could not forget, however, that once he had held his rank.
